Hopewell Furnace National Historic Site is one of the finest examples of an early American iron plantation. Today Hopewell village features a romantic industrial landscape that spanned over 100 years of production (1770-1883). During the summer, activities depicting village life can be seen. Hopewell Furnace is at the center of the last large, unbroken forest left in southeastern PA called the "Hopewell Big Woods". This conservation area features historic sites and more than 70 miles of trails.
